JEFF. DAVIS IN TOWN.

From the Atlantic Monthly for June. The Red School House.

BY LUCY LARCOM. I pa sed it yesterday again, The school house by the river,

Where you and I were children, Jane, And used to glow and shiver In heats of June, December's frost, And where, in rainy weather, The swollen read-side brook we crossed So many times together, I felt the trickle of the rain

From your wet ringlets dripping; I caught your blue eyes twinkle. Jane, When we were nearly elipping: And thought, while you in fear and glee Were clinging to my shoulder, '40, will she trust herself to me. When we are ten years older ?"

For I was full of visions vain, The boy's remantic hunger; You were the whol school's durling, Jane, And many summers connece. Your head a cherub's used to look. With sunbeams on it lying, Rent down to your spelling book, For long and hard words prying. The mountains through the window-pane

Showered over you their glory ; The awkward form toy loved you, Jane. You know the old, old story! I never watch the suns t now I pon those misty ranges, But your bright lips and cheek and brow Gleam out from all its changes

I wonder if you see that chain On memory's dim horizon: There's not a lovelier picture. Jane, To rest even your sweet eyes on: The Haystacks each an airy tent: The Notch a gate of splender; And river, sky and mountain blent In twilight radiance tender.

I wonder-with a flitting pain-If thoughts of me, returning, Are mingled with the mountains, Jane I sifte down that y arning ; A rich man's wife, on you no claim Have I, lost dreams to rally: Yet Penagewasset signs your name Along its winding valley: --And once I hoped that for us twain Might fall one calm life-closing : That Campton Hills might guard us, Jane, In one green grave reposing;

"Puritanism."

The papers which habitually abuse what they call Puritanism are very fond of seizing upon every unusual and atrocions crime which is committed in New England and declaring that such is Puritan morality. The implication is, that the moral influences and efforts which proceed from that quarter are hypocritical. Indeed, nothing is more comical than to read the objurgations poured out upon a New England sinner by those who contemplated the plantation life of slavery and the daily history of Andersonville with perfect complacency. We have been ourselves often favored by the zealous with a list of "Yankee enormities," which they informed as, with burning sarcasm, that it would be well to illustrate: and we remember to have seen a list of some dozen offenses, which was diligently published in the rebel and copsubjects for the artists of Harper's Week
